Document Conversion: Google Docs: Doug Mataconis - - 4 comments More from The Economist on the upcoming Presidential election: "Efforts to curb voting fraud should not, however, be aimed at the African-American community, in our view. This is not to suggest that the electoral systems in the United States are free of all such problems, or that Mr Obama would not do more to improve the systems in future than John McCain. But African-Americans, as a whole, are much less likely than whites to cheat at the ballot box. And, for reasons Mr Obama discussed in his interview, despite the pre-election hysteria about fraud, this means that he stands a much greater chance of being elected. ...the reason for the large black turnout is that there are many more registered black voters than there are registered white ones. This is a simple manifestation of the greater incidence of black-dominated neighbourhoods and churches in which active electoral participation has long been an established part of life. Beyond this, there is more to it. Black people of all ages, and young people in particular, are vastly more likely to identify themselves in many states as Democrats than are whites. This Democratic loyalty also attracts many more Democrats to the polls. What is more, a large proportion of African-Americans are single parents, whose children are less likely to turn out for school exams, or not at all. A recent study suggested that this may account for as much as half the difference between black and white voter turnout. The election will, therefore, be decided in the neighbourhoods and churches of the African-American community, not in the suburbs or on the coast."The present invention relates to structural components for vehicles, such as automobiles and trucks, and, more particularly, to a structural component for a vehicle, which is suitable for application to a roof of the vehicle, such as the roof of a typical sedan.
